Looking For Trouble: Trapped in a zombie-infested town, Jill must work to earn enough money to buy a back-up gun to defend herself. Trouble in Town: The zombies are back, and it's up to Jill and Cody to escape with enough money to rebuild their town.

Make sure you purchase "Trouble In Town," as "Looking For Trouble" only contains three levels. Plaza México (Kansas City) Plaza México is a large regional shopping center located on the northwest side of Kansas City, Missouri, United States, at 13200

West 39th Street. The plaza opened in 1972 and is anchored by a Sears department store (now closed) and a second anchor tenant, Toys "R" Us. Also located within the plaza are Arby's, Chipotle Mexican Grill, Cinnabon, El Cholo, Moe's Southwest Grill, Qdoba Mexican Grill, and Zoes Kitchen. The adjacent Paseo area has a Walgreens and a carwash. History The plaza was developed by Harry H. Peterson, Sr. The neighborhood surrounding it is the Paseo area. The developers envisioned the plaza as an anchor of a new Paseo strip mall area. Paseo When Plaza México opened in 1972, it was the centerpiece of Paseo, a shopping center anchored by a Kohl's department store. When the Kansas City, Missouri, streetcar system closed in 1980, Paseo lost its main street status. Redevelopment In the late 1990s, the shopping center was renovated with an overhaul of the parking lot and landscaping. In 2002, the former Sears, which had been purchased by the May Department Stores Company in the 1980s, closed and reopened as The Bon-Ton department store. In 2007, the current Toys "R" Us opened in the plaza. Plaza México was redeveloped again in 2009 by Prologis, a company that develops real estate. At the time, the developer planned to bring a large grocery store to the plaza. In July 2011, the shopping center closed the Toys "R" Us store. In November 2012, the grocery store, now with a new name, opened.
